Violence in Schools: A Worldwide Affair

Violence in schools is a worldwide problem: it exists in rich and poor countries alike. It's chiefly a male phenomenon, hitting a peak¹ when boys turn 16 years old in some countries, and 13 in others. Experts agree at least on one point: this violence cannot be pinned to a single cause. Instead, they point to complex patterns linked to family situations, socio-economic conditions and teaching methods.

But these are just indicators and do not justify any deterministic explanations. When researchers say that 10 to 20 percent of risk factors are linked to single-parent families, this suggests that 80 to 90 percent of such families are not the source of any violence. Likewise, a child from a black slum area with a teenage mother or a father in jail will not automatically be violent! Likewise, experts say there is a "hard core²" of violent children about five percent of the total. But in comparing several schools in similar problem French neighbourhoods³, I've found that this figure can vary between one and 11 percent. The school itself can be an aggravating factor, through high staff turnover or "ghetto classes" to which poorly-performing students are relegated. These "hard core" groups, then, cannot be deemed "inalterable". On the contrary, something can be done about them.

Should they simply be expelled, as some advocate? Such a measure would only make their segregation and sense of exclusion worse. And they are, after all, at the root of the whole problem. The solution lies partly in developing customized projects, but most importantly, in strengthening economic and social participation.

To put an end to school violence, we need a well-established state with the means to compensate for inequalities, a state that tries to re-establish diversity in neighbourhoods and schools, one that does not give up on the notion of justice for children, as some are demanding.

We should also try to lift schools out of their fortresses, so they do not become the symbol of a society that excludes people. Projects in the Netherlands, Brazil and the United States have shown that schools can be vibrant places that provide social, medical and cultural services to a neighbourhood.

In the Brazilian state of Minas Gerais, for example, there is a vocational school where elderly craftsmen teach their skills to teenagers. Such contact between generations can offer a very social education. 'It takes a village to educate a child,' goes an African proverb. Let's make an effort to seek out these opportunities, even in the most heartless⁴ cities.

PART THREE : WRITING

40%

Do one of the two tasks below. (25 lines)

Task A

Your Australian pen-friend asked you the following questions in his/her last letter:

- How was violence introduced into your schools and universities?
- What are the authorities doing to solve the problem of violence in schools in your country?
- Don't you think violence in schools can ruin your future?

Write the reply to his/her letter.

Task B

"The use of violent methods by students in claiming their rights does not only delay their education; above all, it ruins the future of the whole society." Do you agree or disagree with that statement? Give reasons and examples to explain your point of view. Specify how student Unions should fight for their rights without using violence.
